England. Mr. Jeaffreson, who wrote, three or four years ago, a snocessful book about doctors. as just published another in the same vein, called "A Book about Lawyers." Mr. bonds between this and the 15th of July, Jeaffreson, says the London Examiner, has 1868; and that the specie standard could rought together the results of much out-of- be reached with at least $250,000,000 of he-way reading, including some "things plain legal tender United States notes still not generally known," and a good many outstanding," Mr. McColloch replied as anecdotes which, if they had been told be follows: ore, are too good for any one to mind ecdotes in the first volume is this old

WILKES AND THURLOW. Like his friend John Scott, Thurlow affection for, the afflicted king. Having broken his harangue with several distinct steady, and to work back to specie pay fits of nervous agitation, and at one point ments without a financial collapse. I sin clearest melody of his sonorous voice, and great caution, and attempt no impractiononcluded with these words: "A noble ble thing. viscount has, in an eloquent and energetic manner, expressed his feelings on the pres-ent melancholy situation of his Majesty feelings rendered more poignant from the nobleviscound's having been in the habit of personally receiving marks of indalgence and kindness from his suffering sovereign. My own sorrow, my lords, is aggravated by the came cause. My debt of gratitude is mleed ample for the many favors which have been graciously conferred upon me by his Majesty; and when I forget my sovereign may my God forget me!" As Thurlow sat down the sensation among his brother peers was profound; but Liberty was going to be treated to the whole of it, Wilkes, who had been an auditor of the "Where did you sleep?" said B. inter speech, was less deeply affected. A ricious light burned brightly in his squinting eyes, and as a more than usually diaofical sneer played upon his hideons face, the people's friend hissed out: "God forget you! He'll see you - first." Among the gossip of the book are the

ANEXHOUSE OF THUBLOW. A solicitor had made a series of statements in a vain endeavor to convince his ly, my lord," at last the solicitor exclaimed, goaded into a fury by Thurlow's repeated jaculations of "That's no proof of the man's eath;" "Really, my lord, it is very hard, and it is not right that you won't believe me. I naw the man dead in his coffin. My lord, I tell you he was my client, and he is "No wonder," retorted Thurlow, with a grant and a sneer, "since he was your client. Why did you not tell me that ooner? It would kill me to have such a feliow as you for my attorney." That this great lawyer could thus address a respectible gentleman is less astonishing when i is remembered that he once horrified party of aristocratic visitors at a country house by replying to a lady who pressed him to take some grapes, "Grapes, madam, grapes! Did I not say a minute ago that I had the gripes?" Once this ungentle lawyer was fairly worsted in a verbal contier by an Irish payior. On crossing the threshold of his Ormoud afrest house one norning, the Chancellor was incensed at eeing a load of paving stones placed before his door. Singling out the tallest of a score of Irish workmen who were repairing the those torrents of curses with which his most insolent speeches were usually preluded, and then told the man to move the stones instantly. "Where shall I take them to, your honor?" the pavior inquired, From the Chancellor another volley of blasphemous abuse, ending with, "You lousy scoundrel, take them to helf! -- do you hear me?" "Have a care, your honor," answered the workman, with quiet drollery. don't you think, now, that if I took 'em to the other place, your honor would be less likely to fall over them?"

The famous Lord Kenyon is pictured as an ignorant and absurd person, and these anecdates are told:

One day he would silence an importune mitor or loquacions barrister by exclaim "Ed modus in rebus, or as the vernacular hath it, there must be an end of all things;" on another day he would clothe his face with the wisest of his judicial aspects, and observe, "In advancing to a CLAIM AGENC conclusion on this subject, I am resolved stare supra catiquas sias." When a glaring case of fraud was brought before his of servation, he exclaimed, "The dishonesty is manifest; in the words of an old Latin ange, apparently 'Latet anguis in herba,' ' to a deeply-edified grand jury he remarked in a tone of solemn pathos, "Having thus discharged your consciences, gentlemen, you may retire to your homes in peace, with the delightful consciousness of having performed your duties well; and as you compose yourselves for nocturnal alumber you may apply to yourselves the words of the heathen philosopher, 'Aut Come aut

Without the assistance of Latin, some his remarks uttered from the judgment seal were provocative of laughter. "The allegation," he exclaimed during the examination of an unsatisfactory witness, as far from truth as old Booterium from the Northern Main-a line I have heard or met with God knows wheer."

On another occasion, when he repri manded an attorney for causing a needless and vexations delay in a cause, he observed n boldly metaphorical language: "This is the last hair in the tail of procrastination and it must be plucked out;" and he reported to have lectured "twelve gentle men in the box" thas: "If an individual can break down any of those safeguards which the constitution has wisely and cautionaly creeted, by poisoning the minds of the jury at a time when they are called upon to decide, he will stab the administraion of justice in its most vital parts."

But Kenyon's grandest oration was mad at the trial of Williams for publishing Tom Payne's "Age of R. ason," when the learned Judge, in his summing up, observed: "Christianity, from its earliest institution, met with its opposers. The professors were very soon called upon to publish their Apologies' for the doctrines they had embraced. In what manner they did that, heir adversaries, or sunk under the superiority of their argument, mankind for near two thousand years have had the opporuity of judging. They have seen what Julian, Justin Martyr, and other apologists have written, and have been of opinion that the argument was in favor of those publications." Telling this story in his own way, and improving it-as he was fully estitled in doing-Coleridge, in the "Table falk," assures his readers that Lord Kenron, in his address to the jury in a trial for sphemy, said: "Above all, gentlemen, need I name to you the Emperor Julian, who was so celebrated for the practice of every Christian virtue, that he was called E. are employed in a pork-packing establishment there, and five hundred hogs had arrived by one train.
